

I am asking you to let power lines remain just that and leave broadband Internet to the cable television and telephone companies whose technologies best support it. I believe that the risk of interference is simply too great and that has been proven already in both Japan and the UK.